WINTER ADVENTURE.

Caught on Loose Ice in the Midst of a Storm.

An Incident Not Unspiced of Danger Which Led to Unthought of Results-"Katle Had Me."

New York, Dec. 29.—"Yes, it was an ad-renture, sure enough, and I never think of it without feeling the cold and hearing the vind once more.

I mar-

"I was in Ithaca one winter, and on the 3d of December of that year I made up my mind I'd have a good day's skating on Cayuga lake. The sport was one I was very fond of then, although I've never cared for it since. Business had taken me to a place some ten miles down the lake. and I made up my mind to skate back. The ice on the lake was literally perfect. An intensely sharp and very sudden frost had fairly nipped the water, and the sur-face was not only glare, but the ice was that blue black kind on which the cut of the skate steel shows up like a streak of white paint. In the middle of the lake, however, was a broad expanse of open wa ter. The day was good, too, although it was somewhat cloudy and dull looking. However, as there was no wind, it was the sort of weather when, if your skates are tight and sharp and you have on a com-fortable roundabout for a cost, you can just naturally chew up miles in your long, easy swing. Talk about motion, I don't know any motion so like what I should It Seems Likely That They Will Be Pubthink that of flying must be as the swing and rush of a fellow on skates when the place, and I skated straight ahead to save time. This took me some distance away from the land. It must have been about 1:50—I started at 10—when it struck me the weather was looking somewhat threatening. The wind sprang up, not very strong, you know, but it mouned in a dismal melancholy sort of way as the winter wind will, and I reckoned it wouldn't be a shad idea to make for the land. I was just self, skating out on the lake. It was some time before I could get close enough to make her hear me, even with the wind

"We were then about a mile, perhaps more, from shore. Beyond us, in the center of the lake, the water was open, and the waves began to be felt in slight heaves under the ice on which we were. Still I think we should have made it safely had it not it began to show by the time I reached her. The flakes were as fine as corn meal, and to see through such a fall as that is like looking through a fog, so it wasn't many minutes before all outline of the shore faded away and we were left in the midst of a great whiteness, with the rapidly whitening ice below our feet. Of course I had no compass—one never has a thing when he wants it most—and I could only steer by the wind. I knew this was blo ing off shore, and I made up my mind if I faced it long enough I'd reach land. The Katle spotted this first, and wide, and then I got seared in real carnest. There was nothing to do, however, but to work away from it and try to find land. The snow was so thick by this time that If the wind drove the floating cake on which we stood to the shore to the leeward—that is, if the shore was to the leeward—we must be prepared to take advantage of the chance. If not we would float out on the lake, and that might mean an end of all things on this earth for both. We plowed on through the snow, keeping our backs to the wind until we saw another open space of water. Then we walked up and down to keep warm, and watched that water with an anxiety I can give you no idea of.

"The worst part of the whole business was the fact that neither of us knew where we were or where we were going. It wasn't so awfully cold; snow is sort of warm, and we were not suffering in that way. Fortunately Ihad some of my lunch left, and I made Katie eat a part of it. I EXPERIENCES OF A YOUNG COUPLE can tell you that young lady and I were rapidly getting to be old friends as we tramped up and down there arm in arm. We had taken off our skates, for I knew it might come to a jump at the last mo-ment, and I also knew that we couldn't make that jump with the steels on. BENJAMIN F. BUTLER.

Butler is one of the most methodical of workers, and he understands how to avail himself of all means for lightening the drudgery of work. For many years he has dictated all his correspondence and briefs, and from the time he left the army he possessed in a private secretary named Major a most invaluable assistant.

It is with the aid of secretaries and by an conomy of time that Gen. Butler has already been able to do so much work upon these memoirs. From a money point of view it is believed that the memoirs would be most successful of any written by per-sons who obtained prominence during the war, excepting Gen. Grant. Butler, unlike all of the others who have had a story to tell of army experiences, had already attained notoriety, and had come in contact with many of the foremost men of the day before the war broke out. His aggressive personality, his striking audacity, his brilliancy and his fear of no man had made his life down to 1861 an experience which, if he tells it with that anecdotal charm in which he talks in private, would read like a romance when she told me I was pretty badly scared.

Suddenly we came did opportunity for his peculiar genius. If across a lane of open water about ten feet he tells in his memoirs the story of how he opened a new communication from Wash ington to the north by way of Annapolis he will tell a story to the public with which he has thrilled many of his friends.

However, I said nothing the war, as he described it to the present of the war, as he described it to the present. writer, he will furnish a most graphic and entertaining narrative; for it was he who solved what seemed to be an insolvable problem regarding the treatment of runa way slaves by calling them contrabands of war, so that the word contraband came afterward into universal use in describing this class.

If he tells how he declined an offer of Lincoln's request in the summer of '64, and declined it with a joke, as he narrated the story to a group of friends at a little dinner in Boston some years ago, he will tell a story both interesting and a most valuable contribution to history. He has already written a very brief account of this scene, but in his memoirs he will probably tell it in all its details. Had he proposition he would have been nominated, and of course he, justead of Andrew Johnson, would have become presidentan event which would have been of vast consequence to the country.

Gen. Butler has been in some doubt as to whether he should tell some of the inside history of the great impeachment trial of Andrew Johnson, of which he was one of the managers. If he decides in the affirmative, as he probably will, a very important chapter will be added to the history of that

United States Senators Swindled.

A resident of Baltimore came to grief the other day after having reaped a harvest of five dollar bills from members of the United States senate. His plan was to write a contemplated victim saying that his new born child had been named in his (the victim's) honor, and suggesting small present. Vice President Morton contributed a silver cup, but his colleagues contented themselves with cash donations. In due course Senator Manderson was com-municated with. He suspected a swindle and an investigation proved that his doubts were wall founded. The thirty odd sena-torial "godfathers" are now annoyed, to say the least.

New York, Dec. 39.—It is not only Wall street that suffers from a lack of ready money nowadays. The legal medium of circulation is uncomfortably scarce among all classes of people. Tradesmen are heard frequently to speak of the incongruity of a man rated as a millionaire declaring himself unable to pay a boot, tailor or haber-dashery bill. It is a fact that a man may have assets amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars, and actually be hard pushed to pay his club dues. The other day two richly dressed women drove in a privite carriage to a large store on Twentythird street where they were not known, and between them were barely able to produce fifty cents, the deposit required on some goods they wished kept for them.

CONGESTION OF THE KIDNEYS.

S. J. Thompson, of No. 478 Swan street,
Buffalo, New York, writes of his remarkable cure of congestion of the kidneys:
"Three years ago I was attacked with congestion of the kidneys. My physician, besides administering internal remedies,
had applied on my back, over the affected region, two Alicock's Porous plasters. I recovered in the course of about two weeks.
A year after, exposure brought on a similar attack, but it seemed as if the congestion was more severe.
